Description

Are you able share to your knowledge and ideas to develop & design an annual survey to collect data on health and wellbeing, cultural identity, community importance, traditions and values?

We are a team of researchers from University of Gloucestershire (CCRI) working with the fishermen-led charity Fishing into the Future (FITF) on a DEFRA commissioned project to develop an annual survey that explores social data and officially record what is important to the industry.

We are travelling round fishing ports and will be in Bridlington on the 5th April to work with commercial fishermen to co-design this survey and include what you think is important and how the survey should be run.

Objectives

We want to hear directly from fishermen, the people the survey is intended for. What are your priorities and the issues that important to you?

We have developed a long list of questions and issues (covering a variety of themes) that national fishing stakeholders have said could be explored in the survey but we need to identify which are the most important - or find out if we have missed anything. That is why we want to speak to fishermen - those people that the survey is intended for.

Other information

The event will be attended by a team made up of people from CCRI, FITF and Defra. We expect an interesting discussion providing opportunities for those attending to participate in designing data collection, which will inform future fisheries management. Food and refreshments will be provided and a payment will be made to cover time and travel costs for those participating.
